Biogr.: Hermann Rorschach was born on 8th November 1884 in Zurich and spent his formative years in Schaffhausen, where his father taught art at the boys' primary and the trade schools. A year before he went to the canton school Hermann and his younger siblings lost their mother. In his last year at the canton school Hermann joined the semi-official student association Scaphusia. He passed his school leaving examinations in 1904 qualifying for university, but in the same year his father died after a long illness. This death placed the family financial difficulties but nonetheless it was made possible for him to study medicine.

After a preparatory term at the Académie de Neuchâtel and completing a course in French at the Université de Dijon he matriculated in Zurich in the autumn of 1904 as a medical student. As a twenty-two year old he decided to become a psychiatrist. During the winter term 1906/1907 he studied in Berlin, from where he travelled to Russia for the first time. Following this he registered for one semester at the University of Berne and then continued his studies in Zurich. Rorschach enjoyed keeping company with Russian students and this is how he met the Russian colleague Olga Stempelin, whom he married in 1910. In February 1909, meeting the requirements of the state examination, he concluded his medical studies.

After a stay of several months in Russia with relations of his fiancée, Rorschach commenced work in the summer of 1909 as an assistant at the Thurgovian psychiatric hospital in Münsterlingen. His doctoral dissertation "Über Reflexhalluzinationen und verwandte Erscheinungen", supervised by Eugen Bleuler, was published in 1912. In early 1913 he terminated his service in Münsterlingen and accepted for a few months a deputy position in the psychiatric clinic in Münsingen (near Berne). At the end of 1913 he travelled with his wife to Russia with the intention of establishing himself there as a psychiatrist, but he returned to Switzerland six months later and took a poorly paid position as assistant in the Psychiatric University Hospital Waldau near Berne.

In the autumn of 1915 Rorschach was appointed associate director of the asylum in Herisau and it was during his time here that his wife presented him in 1917 with first a daughter and then two years later a son. At the end of 1917 Rorschach restarted his experiments with inkblots, which he had begun in 1910 and then laid aside. This research occupied him for several years and the results were published in his book "Psychodiagnostik" in 1921. The method presented in it became world-famous as the "Rorschach Test". Eight months later Hermann Rorschach died on the 2nd April 1922 of a belatedly diagnosed appendicitis.

Note.: Konrad Gehring, a schoolmate of H. Rorschach in the Kantonsschule of Schaffhausen, had become a teacher in a school in Altnau, a small town not far from Münsterlingen, where Rorschach was a resident in the Asylum. As Ellenberger relates, at that time Rorschach had conceived the idea of testing his patients with inkblots and comparing the results with those of Jung's Association Test. Gehring suggested to test his pupils in the same way.

In a letter to Springer from the time when Rorschach was in negotiation with Springer for a possible publication of his test (letter from February 16, 1920) Rorschach refers to a plate "not belonging to the series" which he sent as a sample.

195 3/3/5 : Protocols, scorings and interpretations (File)

2 boxes, 20 cm. - Ref. Nr: Rorsch HR 3 : 3:5.

Note.: It is difficult to arrange the protocols in a coherent manner. Temporary grouping: 1) Undated protocols (some of them used 11 cards) from inpatients of the Herisau asylum put together according to diagnosis. 2) Protocols with cards numbered from I to XII, some of them omit cards IV and VIII. 3) Undated protocols with 10 cards used, numbered from I to X. 4) Protocols of nurses. 5) Slips of paper with scorings and other rudimentary items. 6) Protocols of tested colleagues and other tested persons (e.g. G. A. Roemer, Manfred Bleuler, Max Müller, Ernst Blum, Albert Schweitzer, family members). 7) Protocols recorded by Emil Oberholzer, scored and interpreted by H. Rorschach, from 1919 to 1922. 8) Protocols recorded by other colleagues, scored and interpreted by H. Rorschach (Cases of Hans Prinzhorn, Rudolf Brun, Artur Kielholz, Arnold Weber, Eugen Bleuler, Oskar Pfister, Max Müller, G.A. Roemer, Ernst Schneider, Hans Christoffel (Selbstprotokoll), Emil Lüthy, Alfred Furrer, Ulrich Grüniger, Mira Oberholzer, Pfr. Walser, Martha Schwarz, Dr. Hoffmann, Dr. Honegger, Karl Wyss, Eugen Schwarz).

Rorschach left several hundred of handwritten test protocols of patients of the Herisau asylum and of other people (e.g. colleagues, relatives). The protocols stemming from the inpatients were put together by Rorschach according to diagnostic criteria (schizophrenics, manic-depressives, epileptics...). In addition there are more than 50 protocols recorded by colleagues (Oberholzer, Bleuler, Roemer, Pfister...), scored and interpreted by H. Rorschach. A number of (undated) protocols reveal that Rorschach, supposedly in early 1919, used sometimes 11 cards, having already omitted the card originally numbered VIII. In 1919 and even in 1920 he would use the two control tests mentioned in Psychodiagnostics.

Note.: It was in late 1913, during his short residency at the Bernische Kantonale Irrenanstalt Münsingen near Berne, when Rorschach, prompted by the case history of a certain Johannes Binggeli, began his research into Swiss religious sects. Binggeli, founder of a religious sect, had been committed to that asylum from 1896 to 1901. In the following years Rorschach commenced collecting abundant material on sectarianism and sectarians but soon became aware that the phenomenon of sects could not be understood without studying religious and ecclesiastical history, mysticism and mythology. In 1916 he delivered a first address on the subject, titled "Einiges über Schweizerische Sekten und Sektengründer" (Some remarks on Swiss sects and founders of sects) at a meeting of the Swiss Psychiatric Society. He spoke about Johannes Binggeli and his sect "Waldbruderschaft" (Forest-Brotherhood), and about Anton Unternährer, who at the end of the 18th century founded the Antonian teaching, a precursor of Binggeli's Forest-Brotherhood. In 1918 Rorschach presented a second lecture to the Swiss Psychiatric Society titled "Weiteres über Schweizerische Sektenbildungen" (Further remarks on Swiss formations of sects). In 1919 he delivered two papers to the Swiss Psychoanalytic Society, which were posthumously published in 1927 titled "Zwei Schweizerische Sektenstifter, Binggeli – Unternährer" (Two Swiss founders of sects, Binggeli and Unternährer). Intending to publish a comprehensive work on Swiss sects Rorschach applied himself to research on that subject until his death.
